Essay

1. Describe each of the three levels of programming individuals carry in their minds about how they interact with their environment.

Ans:

At the broadest level, all human beings share certain biological reactions.

At the narrowest level are the personality characteristics that are unique to each of us as individuals.

Culture occurs at an intermediate level based on shared experiences within a particular society.

Cognitive Domain: Knowledge
Answer Location: Culture Is Shared
Difficulty Level: Medium

2. Describe the main features of culture.

Ans:

Culture is a set of knowledge structures consisting of systems of values, norms, attitudes, beliefs, and behavioral meanings that are shared by members of a social group (society) and embedded in its institutions and that are learned from previous generations. Culture is shared, learned, and systematic and organized.

Cognitive Domain: Knowledge
Answer Location: Culture: A Working Definition
Difficulty Level: Medium

3. Why do cultures differ and persist?

Ans:

Survival (and the emergence of social institutions), language, religion, and ideology, and other factors such as climate, topography, economic systems, and political boundaries.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis
Answer Location: Why do cultures differ and persist
Difficulty Level: Medium

4. The book discusses four debates about what culture is and whether it matters. Describe two of the debates.

Ans:

1. National Culture: Multiple cultures can exist within national borders, and the same cultural group can span many nations. Multiple subcultures within a nation may still be united within a broader national culture, though focusing too much on national culture (which Hofstede advocates) may ignore subcultures within a nation.

2. Convergence, Divergence, or Equilibrium: Nations are not static over time, but transform with changing traditions and technological and economic development. The idea of convergence suggests that postmaterialist values affect a homogenization of ideology; however, Inglehart (1990) notes that while the postmaterialist values relate to economic development, they do not necessarily hold true for other elements of culture. Another argument about cultural variation comes from Cohen (2001), who argues that, while different environments produce different social systems, different environments can produce similar systems and similar environments can produce vastly different cultures.

3. Organizational Versus National Culture: Organizations have cultures in that they attract and retain certain people and align them with the organization's values and norms. Hofstede argues that nations and organizations' cultures are composed of different elements. National cultures have shared meanings and unconditional relationships, where people are often born into the culture and become totally immersed in it. Organizational cultures, on the other hand, have shared behaviors and conditional relationships. Members are socialized into the culture and are only partly involved in it.

4. Acculturation and Biculturalism: Acculturation concerns the psychological and behavioral changes that occur in people because of contact with different cultures. Individual differences and situational factors influence acculturation patterns of groups and individuals, who may have variation in entry status, personality, facility in communicating the local language, and whether the host country's nationals tend to form relationships with immigrants. Bicultural individuals tend to have lived in another culture for so long that they become flexible and more able to function effectively in both cultures.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Debates surrounding the Concept of Culture

Difficulty Level: Medium

5. What is ethnocentrism? Provide an example.

Ans:

Ethnocentrism is an attitude that one's own cultural group is the center of everything and all other groups are evaluated with reference to it. Examples of ethnocentric attitudes in management include beliefs that the way business is conducted in one's own country is the only way to be effective, that people of one's own culture are naturally better suited to almost any management job, and the role of women in management is only correct as it exists at home.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Ethnocentrism

Difficulty Level: Medium
