82) Name specific uncontrollable external variables that exist in today's market that impact a shoe manufacturer.

Answer:

- The economy: During a recession people have less money to spend on expensive shoes and may postpone the purchase of more expensive shoes.
- The competition: The importation of low-priced shoes may force shoe manufacturers to lower their prices.
- Social/demographic trends: The population is aging. This aging segment is demonstrating a greater interest in comfort shoes. This should influence shoe manufacturers to offer styles that meet the population's styling and comfort needs.
- Technology: New high-quality simulated leather goods are available at reasonable prices, allowing manufacturers to offer comfortable yet fashionable shoes at a lower price.
- Laws and regulations: Increased consumer vocalism for animal rights may make simulated leather goods more desirable. Honestly stating what products are made from is important and in compliance with laws.

83) Companies cannot control the external environment, therefore it is not important to the development of marketing strategies. Do you agree or disagree with this statement? Justify your position.

Answer: Although uncontrollable, the external environment significantly impacts the markets in which companies operate. Successful marketing requires companies to constantly assess the needs of the market and adapt their marketing strategies accordingly. Market needs are very much a function of the competitive, economic, social/demographic, technological, and legal and regulatory forces acting upon them.

86) How can economic influences affect marketing strategies? Identify three key economic variables and describe the influence that each has on the marketing process.

Answer: Economic variables included in the text include the following:

- GDP, which is a measure of the economy's productivity. Periods of economic growth are accompanied by increased consumer and business spending, which offer opportunities for marketers.

- Inflation, a general increase in the prices of goods and services, reduces the real purchasing power of consumers and presents a challenge for marketers as they strive to maintain market share.
- Employment levels indicate the percentage of the labour force that is currently employed. High levels of unemployment reduce the buying power of the jobless and create uncertainty for the working. Both tend to reduce spending, and this creates challenges for marketers. In periods of low unemployment, spending is less restrained and marketers have greater opportunities.
- Real income is closely related to inflation and indicates the volume of goods and services that money can buy. If wages have not kept pace with inflation, consumers lose purchasing power over time. While necessities will remain a priority, marketers of luxury goods will see a decline in demand for their products.

87) Describe how the economic situation in the United States can impact Canada.

Answer: The United States is Canada's largest trading partner, so the following effects can occur in Canada:

- A rise in the value of the Canadian dollar relative to the U.S. dollar reduces demand for Canadian goods in the United States.
- High unemployment in the United States will reduce U.S. demand for goods, impacting Canada indirectly.
- High inflation in the United States will reduce purchasing power, impacting demand for Canadian products indirectly.

88) Canadian organizations that export to the United States must consider the relative value of both countries' currencies. As the Canadian dollar rises in value relative to the U.S. dollar, the economic environment of trade between these two countries is changing. Describe how this trend is impacting trade between these two countries.

Answer: Canadian companies have traditionally enjoyed a price advantage over their American counterparts because the Canadian dollar has been valued well below the U.S. dollar. Canadian-produced goods were traditionally more price competitive on international markets. As the value of the Canadian dollar rises relative to the U.S. dollar, this price advantage is eroding, making Canadian goods less attractive. Canadian companies must work to reduce costs to maintain profit margins at low prices or begin to differentiate to compete in ways other than price.

89) Identify and explain the type of marketing structure indicated in each of the following:

- Urban public transit systems
- Canadian telecommunications industry
- Canadian restaurant industry

- Financial assets (stocks, bonds, mutual funds)

Answer:

- Public transit: Monopoly within a specific geographical area
- Telecommunications: Oligopoly where control is held by only three large firms: BCE, Rogers, and Telus
- Restaurants: Monopolistic competition where numerous brands are available (McDonald's, Harveys, A&W, etc.), each offering a unique marketing mix
- Financial assets: Pure competition because financial products are uniform commodities with no clear advantage of one brand over another

93) Describe how the Canadian family is changing.

Answer: Families are getting smaller and less traditional in structure. Many Canadians now postpone marriage or dispense with it altogether. Only 67% of Canadian families are composed of married couples. Common-law unions are increasing and are now up to 16.7% of all unions in Canada. Single-parent families comprise 16.3% of the population. Relatively higher rates of separation and divorce are creating blended families, which bring together children from previous marriages who then spend time between two different households. Same-sex common-law couples rose by 15%.

94) As consumer lifestyles change, so too must the marketing strategies of the companies providing them with products and services. Identify three lifestyle trends that are currently impacting Canadian marketers. For each trend that you identify, provide an example to demonstrate how a company has responded to the trend.

Answer: Examples will vary from student to student, but key lifestyle trends identified in the text include:

- a greater emphasis on quality of life over work- pressure to balance work and family life- time pressure
- a strong concern for health and welfare
- healthy diets
- effects of the environment on health
- concern for the environment
- value placed on social responsibility

95) Your text describes several trends that are changing Canadian lifestyles. Choose any one of these trends and describe the trend then give an example of a product or service that has been successfully marketed to take advantage of this trend.

Answer: Lifestyle trends and examples noted in the text include:

- Increasingly hectic lifestyles and time-pressed households demand convenience items,

- such as prepared convenience foods, frozen meals, prepackaged lunches for kids.
- Stronger concerns for health and well-being led Kraft to launch new nutritional guidelines for many of its products. Unilever's Hellman's products come in a variety of fat contents.
- "Do-it-yourself" is becoming "Do-it-for-me" and home building centres such as Home Depot, Rona, and Lowe's are providing contract services for installation of a variety of their home improvement products.

Students should identify and describe one of the above mentioned trends and relate a successful product or service to that trend. The products and services included above are included in the text, however, correct answers could include a variety of products and services. These will vary based on students' individual experiences.

96) How can a company act in a socially responsible manner with regard to the environment? Use examples in your response.

Answer:

- Cause-related marketing, supporting environmental causes of importance to their customers (e.g., CIBC's title sponsorship of Run for the Cure)
- Develop products and services that are more environmentally responsible (e.g., Groove Nutrition's novel container for Rumble, which is environmentally friendly)
- Demonstrate ethical business practices and communicate these efforts to their customers (e.g., Groove Nutrition, makers of Rumble, focus on people, planet and profit)
- Pollution prevention efforts in operations (e.g., Panasonic's Green Plan 2018) Students may choose to relate examples from their own experiences rather than those from the text.

97) Canada is a diverse country where the makeup of the population is continuing to shift away from one of a predominantly European background. Speak to at least one of Canada's diverse subcultures and provide an example of how a company is responding to these changes.

Answer: Subcultures include:

- Aboriginal populations with 20% growth in last five years, now 4.3% of Canada's population
- Foreign-born Canadians with 20.6% of the total populations (and growing)
- Canadians of Asian ancestry with 11% of the population (East Asians 7%, West Asians 4%)
- Newcomers who are generally younger than the rest of the population
- The geographic distribution of immigrant populations changing, with more settling in Saskatchewan and Manitoba (over Ontario)
- 63.4% of Canada's 6.8 million immigrants living in Toronto, Montreal, or Vancouver areas

98) Describe recent Canadian media usage trends. What are marketers doing to adapt to these trends?

Answer: Canadians are spending less time with traditional media (TV, radio, newspaper, magazines) and more time with digital and mobile media (Internet, PDAs, cellphones, etc.). Instead of implementing mass reach with mass media campaigns, marketers are now implementing selective reach, highly targeted campaigns—a key benefit offered by digital media.

99) The belief that it is less expensive and more profitable to hold on to current customers than attract new ones is a fundamental premise of customer relationship management. How has technology made this marketing theory's implementation more practical?

Answer: Through technologies such as the Internet, cellphones, and PDAs, companies can send messages directly to customers based on known preferences and shopping behaviours. These preferences can be determined through database analysis. The information stored in these databases is gathered through technological advances such as POS scanner data, loyalty cards, and software advances. Companies are also able to make use of technologies like AI (artificial intelligence) to delegate customer service and communications tasks (generating content) to better, and more quickly, respond to their customers in real-time.

Answer: Examples provided by students may vary to include those from the text and those from their personal knowledge. Here are some examples:

- Dollarama continues to expand
- UsedEveryWhere.com offers great deals on essentials
- Walmart targets the value-conscious consumer
- McDonald's and Tim Hortons offer low-cost fast service
- Prestige products such as Rolex, BMW, and so on benefit from targeting the top fifth income earners

101) Privacy has become an important issue for Canadian businesses. What Canadian legislation addresses privacy issues for business? Why has this legislation become important?

Answer: The Privacy Act respects the rights of Canadians by placing limits on the collection, use, and disclosure of personal information. It also gives Canadians the right to access and correct any personal information about them held by government organizations. The Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act (PIPEDA) sets ground rules for how private-sector organizations may collect, use, or disclose personal information. The ability to track and store personal information as well as purchases, preferences, and so on has raised concerns that consumers' personal privacy in the electronic world needs standards of protection.
