10) Describe the four steps a firm should take when it is considering going global.

Answer: Management first needs to examine whether it is in the firm's best interest to focus exclusively on the home market or to move out into foreign markets. This is a "go" or "no go" decision. The second step, if the decision is "go," is to determine which global markets are most attractive for the firms. Some countries will hold greater opportunities than others. After attractive markets are identified, the third step is to determine which market-entry strategy, and thus which level of commitment, is best for the firm. Finally, management must consider marketing mix strategies for foreign markets, determining what mixture of standardization and localization will most benefit the firm.

AACSB: Analytical thinking

34) Describe the function of the World Trade Organization (WTO) and explain how it originated.

Answer: The objective of the WTO is to help world trade flow as smoothly, freely, and predictably as possible. It accounts for about 98 percent of world trade and has moved toward creating a single open world market. Many negotiations in recent years have focused on issues related to economic development. It was created in 1984 during the Uruguay Round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), which was established in the aftermath of World War II.

AACSB: Analytical thinking

35) What is protectionism and why might a government adopt it as a policy? Explain how three examples of protectionism function.

Answer: A country that has a policy of protectionism enforces rules on foreign firms in order to give home companies an advantage. Examples of protectionism include tariffs, embargoes, and import quotas. Import quotas are set on foreign goods in order to reduce competition for domestic industries. This can make goods more expensive within a country because the absence of cheaper foreign goods reduces pressure on domestic firms to lower prices. An embargo is an extreme quota that completely prohibits trade with a specified country. Tariffs are taxes on imported goods, making foreign goods more expensive and giving domestic goods a price advantage.

36) Describe the function of an economic community and explain how its policies can be advantageous to marketers. Give two examples of important economic communities.

Answer: When countries band together to promote trade among themselves and make it easier for member nations to compete elsewhere, they form an economic community. These communities of countries coordinate trade policies and ease restrictions on the flow of products and capital across their borders. Economic communities are important to marketers because they set policies in such areas as product, package labeling, and advertising regulations that influence strategic decisions for marketers in these regions. The European Union (EU) and the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) are two of the most powerful economic communities.

AACSB: Application of knowledge

37) How might a nation's strict import quotas on particular products negatively affect consumers in that country?

Answer: Import quotas are designed to reduce competition for domestic industries. With reduced competition and the absence of less expensive foreign products, domestic industries may feel less pressure to lower their prices and consumers may have to pay more than if foreign competition was a larger part of the market.

Difficulty: Moderate

LO: 2.2: Explain how international organizations such as the World Trade Organization (WTO), the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund (IMF), economic communities and individual country regulations facilitate and limit a firm's opportunities for globalization

38) The U.S. government proposed a tariff against some Chinese textiles and clothing when the trade deficit with China reached $103 billion. Explain what the United States was trying to achieve through this action.

Answer: Governments use tariffs on imported goods to give domestic competitors an advantage in the marketplace by making foreign competitors' goods more expensive than their own goods. By placing a tariff on certain items imported from China, the U.S. government was trying to give U.S. consumers a financial incentive for buying products made within the United States.

99) Describe the group of consumers known as the bottom of the pyramid and explain an opportunity and challenge of marketing to this group.

Answer: Bottom of the pyramid refers to the more than 4 billion consumers worldwide, living in least developed countries and developing countries, who live on less than $2 per day. They represent an incredible opportunity because of their size and total purchasing power, which is expected to grow in developing countries. They represent a challenge because they have limited discretionary money, so they are unlikely to purchase "inventory" products, such as a whole bottle of shampoo or soap. Marketers have introduced one-use sachet packaging to meet the needs of these consumers.

100) Describe and compare the three basic levels of economic development.

Answer: A country's level of economic development is a broad picture that looks past GDP to include an assessment of the country's standard of living and the steps the country is taking to improve its economic health. A least developed country (LDC) in most cases has an agricultural-based economy. People grow what they need and barter for the rest. These countries are attractive markets for staples and inexpensive items. Developing countries usually have a viable middle class that is growing. Developing countries are moving away from an emphasis on agriculture to an emphasis on industry, and standards of living, education, and the use of technology are on the rise. These countries are the future market for consumer goods. Developed countries have sophisticated marketing systems, strong private enterprises, and bountiful market potential for many goods and services. Such countries are economically advanced and offer a wide range of opportunities for international marketers.

102) What are the two purposes of the laws governing American business? Describe how at least two regulatory agencies fulfill these purposes.

Answer: Business laws in the United States have two purposes. The first purpose is to make sure that businesses compete fairly with each other. The second purpose is to make sure that businesses don't take advantage of consumers. The Consumer Product Safety Commission serves to protect consumers from businesses by regulating and testing potentially hazardous products. The Environmental Protection Agency also protects consumers by developing and enforcing regulations that protect the natural environment from production activities. The Federal Trade Commission protects consumers against deceptive advertising and product labeling. It also protects businesses against unfair advantages competitors could gain through deceptive advertising. The Food and Drug Administration protects consumers from dangerous ingredients in foods, drugs, and cosmetics.

133) Compare the three product strategy choices a large organization such as General Electric or Frito Lay has when selling in foreign markets.

Answer: The three choices are a straight extension strategy, a product adaptation strategy, and a product invention strategy. The straight extension strategy retains the same product for domestic and foreign markets. In other words, the product is standardized. The product adaptation strategy recognizes that in many cases people in different cultures do have strong and different product preferences. Therefore, the product is modified, in small or significant ways, for each market. The product invention strategy means the company develops a new product to fit the specific needs of new foreign markets. This is a policy of localization.
