Assignment 2-2 Critical Thinking: Incidental Disclosure Versus HIPAA Violation

1. ID: Patient sign-in sheets are permissible as long as the reason for the visit or the patient's medical condition is not listed.
2. V: It is a HIPAA violation to let other individuals hear conversations about patients who have medical conditions that are considered confidential information.
3. V: Under HIPAA regulations, steps should be taken to have the recipient destroy the protected health (financial) information.
4. ID: Under HIPAA regulations, it is necessary to maximize efforts to avoid disclosures of protected health information throughout medical offices.
5. V: Under HIPAA regulations, it is your duty to ensure that nonstaff persons will not access patients' medical records. Place medical record charts face down at the reception areas so that the patient's name is not exposed to other patients or visitors to your office.
6. ID: You have taken and used all precautionary measures to avoid unauthorized disclosure of protected health information.

7. ID: Use care in the choice of words when leaving a voice mail message in case it was inadvertently received at the wrong number. Be sure to leave your name, office name, and return telephone number.
8. V: It is a HIPAA violation to let other individuals hear conversations about patients who have medical conditions that are considered confidential information.
9. V: Never provide information about the results of diagnostic tests to the patient or leave a voice mail message about a test. Let the physician do it.
10. ID: A patient's name may be called out in the reception room; however, some offices prefer to use first names and not call out last names. This would be considered an incidental disclosure.
11. N: Talking to your sister on the telephone does not come under HIPAA compliance regulations.
12. ID: Health care professionals may discuss a patient's condition over the telephone or in treatment areas with the patient, a provider, or a family member.
