121. Explain the role of ethics in corporations.
ANSWER: Ethics, or beliefs about what constitutes right or wrong in a situation, has taken on renewed importance in recent years due to high-profile ethical breaches by organizations. The ethical dilemmas managers face revolve around how an organization treats its employees, how employees treat the organization, and how employees and organizations treat other economic agents. Corporate governance is one special aspect of business ethics and a medium for overseeing a public corporation by a board of directors. The board is entrusted with the task of ensuring the business is properly managed and that the decisions made by its senior management are in the best interests of shareholders and other stakeholders. A breakdown in this governing structure or exercising independence outside the ethical goals and expectations entrusted to the board can lead to problems.

122. Describe Geert Hofstede's five dimensions of cultural values and explain how these values can serve as a guide for managers.

ANSWER: Hofstede's five categories are individualism/collectivism, power distance, uncertainty avoidance, masculinity, and long-term orientation. Individualism is characterized by people in a culture defining themselves primarily as an individual versus being part of a group. Collectivism is characterized by tight social frameworks in which people tend to base their identities on the group to which they belong. Power distance is the extent to which people accept as normal an unequal distribution of power. Uncertainty avoidance is the extent to which people feel threatened by unknown situations and prefer to be in clear and unambiguous situations. Masculinity is the extent to which the dominant values in a society emphasize aggressiveness and the acquisition of money and other possessions as opposed to concern for people, relationships among people, and overall quality of life. Long-term orientation related to working on projects that have a distant payoff, persistence, and thrift. Bottom line is that managers should discern and understand these differing values and beliefs from diverse cultures because they affect work attitudes and beliefs directly.

123. Describe reasons for the decline of the manufacturing sector and the tremendous growth in the service sector.

ANSWER: Manufacturing embarked a long period of decline in the 1970s primarily due to foreign competition, which had better equipment and higher efficiency levels. Service organizations can play on the many tools, techniques, and methods that manufacturing firms used and can utilize these to increase customer utility. Advances in information technology have helped service firms respond more quickly and efficiently to consumer demands and competitors.

124. Explain the growing presence of knowledge workers in today's workforce and how these employees differ from traditional workers. Describe the specific issues managers must address when employing knowledge workers.

ANSWER: Knowledge workers and how well these employees are managed is seen as a major factor in determining which firms will be successful in the future. These workers differ from traditional workers who were valued for what they did or their years of experience. Knowledge workers tend to work in high-technology firms and are usually experts in some abstract knowledge base. They often believe they have the right to work in an autonomous fashion, and they identify more strongly with their profession than with any organization—even to the extent of defining performance primarily in terms recognized by other members of their profession. As the importance of information-driven jobs grows, the need for knowledge workers will grow as well. These employees require extensive and highly specialized training, and not everyone is willing to make the human capital investments necessary to move into these jobs. In fact, even after knowledge workers are on the job, retraining and training updates are critical so that their skills do not become obsolete. It has been suggested, for example, that the "half-life" for a technical education in engineering is about three years. Further, the failure to update the required skills will not only result in the organization's losing competitive advantage but will also increase the likelihood that the knowledge worker will go to another firm that is more committed to updating those skills. Compensation and related policies for knowledge workers must also be specially tailored.

offshoring. Those salary demands are lower and there is an abundance of talent to meet the firms' needs. A publisher sending its textbook page makeup would be an example of outsourcing or offshoring, as would a cafeteria at a museum being outsourced to a company specializing in the food service industry.
