87. What is the relationship between ethics, values, terminal values, and instrumental values?

Ans: Ethics is a code of moral principles that defines right from wrong. Values, in a personal sense, are broad beliefs about what is ethical. Terminal values and instrumental values are subsets of personal values. Terminal values have to do with desired end states (what a person wants the results of their actions to be) such as happiness, security, and self-respect. Instrumental values determine how a person goes about achieving his/her desired end state.

89. Define cultural relativism and moral absolutism. How do they influence international business ethics?

Ans: Cultural relativism is the belief that the values and practices of the local area determine what is ethical. Moral absolutism is the belief that there are absolute truths that apply universally and that these truths are more important than local values. Sometimes, one society tries to impose their ethics on another society. This is particularly true in the international business arena. When this occurs, it is called ethical imperialism.
