80. The following characteristics should be considered when developing HR metrics and analytics:

- (a) Accurate data can be collected.
- (b) Measures are linked to strategic and operational objectives.
- (c) Calculations can be clearly understood.
- (d) Measures provide information valued by executives.
- (e) Results can be compared both externally and internally.
- (f) Measurement data drives HR management efforts.

81. The four important factors in changing culture are:

Define the desired behavior: Provide behavioral examples of how people are expected to act and tie these behaviors to the performance management system.

Deploy role models: Select leaders who exemplify the desired behaviors and make them visible throughout the organization.

Provide meaningful incentives: Reward the role models with recognition to reinforce their behavior and to signal the rest of the organization.

Provide clear and consistent messages: Align what you say with what you do and reward.

82. Organizational mission is the core reason for the existence of the organization and what makes it unique.

83. Due diligence is a comprehensive assessment of all aspects of the business being acquired. Financial, sales and marketing, operations, and Human Resource staffs can all be involved before the final decision is made to merge or acquire a company.

84. Severance benefits are temporary payments made to laid-off employees to ease the financial burden of unemployment.

85. Benchmarking is the process of comparing the business metrics and outcomes to an industry standard or best practice. An organization compares itself to similar organizations that are recognized for demonstrating excellence for a specific process. Benchmarking is important because it enables an organization to compare its practices to those of other organizations and then use the knowledge to improve its practices or advertise the excellence of its practices.

86. They can provide their perspectives an expertise by doing the following:

Having a seat at the strategic table: Companies must include HR professionals in discussions about strategy and encourage them to provide input.

Being knowledgeable about business operations: Understanding how the business works and knowing the need for certain strategies.

Focusing on the future: Strategic planning requires leaders to think about the future based on past experiences.

Prioritizing business goals: Efforts that have the greatest impact on the business and its objectives are emphasized first.

Understanding what to measure: Metrics are a vital part of assessing success, which means identifying the right metrics that are linked to business goals.

chapter 2

87. Strategic HR management refers to the use of Human Resource management practices to gain or keep a competitive advantage.

88. Forecasting uses information from the past and the present to identify expected future conditions.

89. Human Resource planning is the process of analyzing and identifying the need for and availability of people so that the organization can meet its strategic objectives.

90. Strategic planning is the process of defining a strategy, or direction, and making decisions on how to allocate the resources of the organization to pursue this strategy.

91. HR must be involved during workforce adjustments to ensure that the organization does not violate any of the nondiscrimination or other laws governing workforce reductions. Selection criteria for determining which employees will be laid off must comply with Title VII of the Civil Rights Act as well as the Age Discrimination in Employment Act and the Americans with Disabilities Act. A careful analysis and disparate impact review should be conducted before final decisions are made.

There is no legal requirement to provide severance benefits, and loss of medical benefits is a major problem for laid-off employees. However, under the federal Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act (COBRA), displaced workers can retain their group medical coverage for up to 18 months for themselves, and for up to 36 months for their dependents, if they pay the premiums themselves.

Employers must also comply with the Older Workers Benefit Protection Act (OWBPA) when implementing RIFs. The OWBPA requires employers to disclose the ages of both terminated and retained employees in layoff situations, and a waiver of rights to sue for age discrimination must meet certain requirements. The worker must be given something of value (“consideration”) in exchange for the waiver of right to sue, typically severance benefits. When laying off a group of employees, workers over age 40 who are being laid off must be granted 45 days in which to consider accepting severance benefits and waiving their right to sue.

To provide employees with adequate notice of plant closings or mass layoffs, a federal law was passed—the Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification (WARN) Act. This law requires private or commercial organizations that employ 100 or more full-time workers who have worked more than 6 months in the previous year to give a 60-day notice before implementing a layoff or facility closing that involves more than 50 people. However, workers who have been employed less than 6 months in the prior year, as well as part-time staff members working fewer than 20 hours per week, are not counted toward the total of 50 employees. Despite not being formally counted to determine implementation of the law, these individuals should still be given some form of notice. The WARN Act imposes heavy fines on employers who do not follow the required process and give proper notice.

92. The Human Resource planning process begins with considering the organizational plans and the environmental analysis that went into developing strategies. Strengths, weaknesses, opportunities, and threats are considered. Then the possible available workforce is evaluated by identifying both the external and internal workforce. Once those assessments are complete, forecasts must be developed to identify both the demand for and supply of Human Resources. Management then formulates HR staffing plans and actions to address imbalances, both short-term and long term. Specific strategies may be developed to fill vacancies or deal with surplus employees. Finally, HR plans are developed to provide specific direction for the management of HR activities related to employee recruiting, selection, and retention. The most telling evidence of successful HR planning is a consistent alignment of the availabilities and capabilities of Human Resources with the needs of the organization over time.

93. Before the managers in a company begin strategic planning, they study and assess the dynamics of the environment in which they operate to better understand how these conditions might affect their plans. The process of environmental scanning helps to pinpoint strengths, weaknesses, opportunities, and threats that the organization will face during the planning horizon. The HR department should be involved in this process to make sure that an employee perspective is considered.

The external environment includes many economic, political, and competitive forces that will shape the future. For HR the internal environment includes the quality and quantity of talent, the organizational culture, and the talent pipeline and leadership bench strength.

Opportunities and threats emerge from the external environment and can impact the outcomes for the firm. Many of these forces are not within the organization's control, but must be considered in the scanning process because they can affect the business. Dealing with uncertainty in the external environment is an important skill for planners. The external environmental scan includes an assessment of economic conditions, legislative/political influences, demographic changes, and geographic and competitive issues.

94. Once Human Resources needs have been forecast, then availability of qualified individuals must be identified. Forecasting availability considers both external and internal supplies. Although the internal supply may be somewhat easier to calculate, it is important to calculate the external supply as accurately as possible.

External Supply: The external supply of potential employees available to the organization can be identified. Government estimates of labor force populations, trends in the industry, and many more complex and interrelated factors must be considered. Such information is often available from state or regional economic development offices. The following items may be included:

- Net migration into and out of the area
- Individuals entering and leaving the workforce
- Individuals graduating from schools and colleges
- Changing workforce composition and patterns
- Economic forecasts for the next few years
- Technological developments and shifts
- Actions of competing employers
- Government regulations and pressures
- Circumstances affecting persons entering and leaving the workforce

Internal Supply: Estimating internal supply considers the number of external hires and the employees who move from their current jobs into others through promotions, lateral moves, and terminations. It also considers that the internal supply is influenced by training and development programs, transfer and promotion policies, and retirement policies, among other factors. In forecasting the internal supply, data from the replacement charts and succession planning efforts are used to project potential personnel changes, identify possible backup candidates, and keep track of attrition (resignations, retirements, etc.) for each department in an organization.

95. Staffing for global operations includes a wide variety of alternatives. The optimal solution is to combine the expertise of local employees with the organization-specific knowledge of employees from the home country (headquarters). Some countries require that the organization employ a certain percentage of workers from the host country. Each organization will use a staffing model that best fits its culture and strategic goals. An expatriate is a citizen of one country who is working in a second country and employed by an organization headquartered in the first country. Moving an employee to an overseas assignment for an extended period requires careful selection, training and planning to make the experience a success. The return of an expatriate (called repatriation) must be well planned and executed for the organization to continue the benefits of the overseas assignment when the employee comes back. Leadership development is especially important for MNCs. It is becoming more important for individuals in top management positions to have international experience so that they understand the worldwide marketplace. Effective selection and development processes are needed to ensure that the right individuals are chosen for these roles. Leading across cultures requires specific skills, and organizations should provide formal training along with expatriate assignments to develop leaders who can achieve results in this demanding environment. Again, merging of company and HR strategy is required. HR planning is frequently a direct consequence of implementing strategies to move the organization forward. HR planning deals with deciding how many people will be needed to execute specific functions of an organization.

96. After a deal for a merger or acquisition is closed, the focus of HR activity switches to the orderly transition of basic HR processes such as payroll and benefits migration. During the first 60 days after the acquisition, HR must deliver high-quality administrative and operational support to employees and managers. The immediate concerns are often about basic services needed to run the operations. Frequent communication, employee hotlines, and guidance for managers all contribute to employee retention and loyalty during the chaotic, early days of the transition. During the transition, managers focus on identifying key talent and establishing initiatives to retain these critical employees. Retention bonuses and special assignments can be used to keep key talent in place during the integration stage. Integrating HR information systems is important to provide managers with information about employee capabilities, performance, and potential. The acquiring organization cannot make optimum Human Resource assessments without access to employees' historical information. An inventory of knowledge, skills, and expertise along with performance information provide the data for making suitable assignments for employees from both organizations. Gathering all relevant HR information in a single database helps managers to analyze and compare employee skills and make informed decisions about which employees should be retained. As the businesses are merged, culture based conflicts can emerge. Changing the organizational culture depends upon changing behavior in the organization. Following are four important factors in changing culture:

- Define the desired behaviors: Provide behavioral examples of how people are expected to act and tie these behaviors to the performance management system.
- Deploy role models: Select leaders who exemplify the desired behaviors and make them visible throughout the organization.
- Provide meaningful incentives: Reward the role models with recognition to reinforce their behavior and to signal the rest of the organization.
- Provide clear and consistent messages: Align what you say with what you do and reward.

97. Forecasting methods may be either judgmental or mathematical. Methods for forecasting Human Resources range from a manager's best guess to a rigorous and complex computer simulation. Despite the availability of sophisticated judgmental and mathematical models and techniques, forecasting is still a combination of quantitative methods and subjective judgment. The facts must be evaluated and weighed by knowledgeable individuals, who use the mathematical models as tools and make judgments to arrive at decisions. HR forecasting should be done over three planning periods: short range, intermediate range, and long range. The most commonly used planning period of six months to one year focuses on short-range forecasts for the immediate HR needs of an organization. Intermediate- and long-range forecasting are much more difficult processes. Intermediate-range plans usually project one to three years into the future, and long-range plans extend beyond three years.

98. One effective approach to measuring strategic performance of organizations, including their HR departments, is to use the balanced scorecard. The balanced scorecard is a framework organizations use to report on a diverse set of performance measures. Organizations that did not use a balanced scorecard recognized that focusing strictly on financial measures only limited their view. The balanced scorecard balances financial and nonfinancial measures so that managers focus on long-term drivers of performance and organizational sustainability. The balanced scorecard measures performance in four areas:

- Financial measures: Traditional financial measures such as profit and loss, operating margins, utilization of capital, return on investment, and return on assets are needed to ensure that the organization manages its bottom line effectively.
- Internal business processes: Product and service quality, efficiency and productivity, conformance with standards, and cycle times can be measured to ensure that the operation runs smoothly and efficiently.
- Customer relations: Customer satisfaction, loyalty, and retention are important to ensure that the organization is meeting customer expectations and can depend on repeat business from its customers.
- Learning and growth activities: Employee training and development, mentoring programs, succession planning, and knowledge creation and sharing provide the necessary talent and human capital pool to ensure the future of the organization.

Organizational results in each of these areas determine if the organization is progressing toward its strategic objectives. Using the balanced scorecard requires spending considerable time and effort to identify the appropriate HR measures in each of the four areas mentioned earlier and how they tie to strategic organizational success. The balanced scorecard should align with company goals and focus on results.

The strategic planning cycle typically covers a three- to five-year time frame, although some firms conduct long-term planning that can cover up to ten years or more. When formulating the strategic plan, management considers both internal and external forces that affect a company, such as the conditions that exist in the industry environment. The guiding force behind the strategic planning process is the organizational mission, which is the core reason for the existence of the organization and what makes it unique. The mission statement is usually determined by the organizational founders or leaders and sets the general direction of the firm.

The planning process begins with an assessment of the current state of the business and the environmental forces that may be important during the strategic planning cycle. Analysis of the strengths, weaknesses, opportunities, and threats (SWOT) is a common starting point because it allows managers to consider both internal and external conditions that a business faces. The SWOT analysis helps managers to formulate a strategic plan that considers the organization's ability to deal with the situation at hand based on its own strengths and weaknesses, as well as the external opportunities and threats that exist in the firm's external environment. The planning process requires continuous monitoring and responding to environmental changes and competitive conditions, which means that strategic planning is an ongoing process that is never fully complete and must be constantly revisited.

Managers then determine the objectives for the planning cycle and formulate organization-level strategies to accomplish those objectives. Each function within the organization (such as the HR department) then formulates strategies that will link to and support the organization-level strategies. The strategic plan is re-evaluated periodically because conditions may change and managers must react to a fluid business environment.

100. The starting point for evaluating internal workforce strengths and weaknesses is an audit of the jobs that need to be done in the organization. A comprehensive analysis of all current jobs provides a basis for forecasting what jobs will need to be done in the future. Much of the data required for the audit should be available from existing staffing and organizational databases. The following are key questions that are addressed during the internal jobs assessment:

- What jobs exist now and how essential is each job?
- How many individuals are performing each job?
- What are the reporting relationships of jobs?
- What are the vital KSAs (knowledge, skills, and abilities) needed in the jobs?
- What jobs will be needed to implement future organizational strategies?
- What are the characteristics of those anticipated jobs?
