Scenario 2-1

As one of the world's largest computer and technology developers, Dell, Inc. has never been a stranger to advertising. However, due to a consistent decline in market share, the Texas-based company is looking to overhaul its advertising efforts for the first time in years. In the past, Dell found success promoting its products as some of the most inexpensive computer products in the market. However, the company's new ad campaign, which will be targeted toward more high-end users, will make no mention of product price. The company is looking to reinvent its image and believes that the first step in doing so is to revamp its outdated advertising campaign.

68. (Scenario 2-1) Dell decides not to use a full-service advertising agency because it would like its own employees to take responsibility for the new ad campaign. However, full-service agencies do provide a number of advantages— one of these advantages is that they:

- a. are always large, employing thousands of people.
- b. can provide the physical facilities for broadcast production.
- c. have an array of talented professionals to meet all the needs of a client.
- d. are the only way to create an ad campaign.

Scenario 2-2

Brush Strokes is an art supply store located in a town with a population of about 100,000 people. The town is also home to a major State University. Brush Strokes gets a majority of its business from the student population. It uses the services of a local full-service advertising agency to promote themselves. A large part of its marketing budget has been used in running small advertisements in the local and school newspapers at the beginning of each term. The advertising agency is now recommending that Brush Strokes devote a majority of its budget to running television spots during broadcasts of the University's football and basketball games. While the owners of Brush Strokes agree that they could be doing a better job of reaching a larger portion of the student population, they have not come to any conclusions about the best way to accomplish this.

Scenario 2-5

In 2008, Chicago native Andrew Mason launched Groupon, a website that offered Chicago-based consumers various “deals of the day.” At the time, Groupon had a unique business model—each day, one “Groupon” would be offered in a particular city. If a certain number of people signed up for the offer, then the deal became available to all. Now, years later, the business continues to grow, and the service is being offered in many U.S. cities. Google made a multi-billion dollar offer for the company that Mason turned down in December of 2010. Continuing the company’s rapid rise to success will be a challenging task, because the company will be the first to attempt to advertise the unique services. Groupon needs to find ways to attract new users, and looking into new forms of advertising will be essential to the company’s success.

82. (Scenario 2-5) As Groupon's services differ depending on the city in which it is offered, its CEO decides that each variation needs to have a catchy slogan that relates to that particular market. 90. What is crowdsourcing? Explain.

ANSWER: Crowdsourcing involves the online distribution of certain tasks to groups (crowds) of experts, enthusiasts, or even consumers. The idea behind crowdsourcing is to get consumers more involved with and committed to a brand in a way that passive, intrusive advertising simply cannot. Consumers help “build the brand” with recommendations for features or even advertising campaign images. They also can communicate about the brand to audiences in ways that seem natural and credible— something corporate-launched advertising struggles with.

91. Describe the role that advertisers play for trade resellers.

ANSWER: A trade reseller is a general description for all organizations in the marketing channel of distribution that buy products to resell to customers. Resellers can be retailers, wholesalers, or distributors. These resellers deal with both household consumers and business buyers at all geographic market levels.

Retailers that sell in national or global markets are the most visible reseller advertisers and promotion users. Regional retail chains, typically grocery chains or department stores serve multistate markets and use advertising suited to their regional customers. At the local level, small retail shops of all sorts rely on social and digital media, newspaper, radio, television, and are a completely different breed of reseller. Technically, these types of companies deal only with business customers, since their position in the distribution channel dictates that they sell products either to producers (who buy goods to produce other goods) or to retailers (who resell goods to household consumers). Wholesalers and distributors have little need for mass media advertising over media such as television and radio. Rather, they use trade publications, directory advertising such as the Yellow Pages and trade directories, direct mail, personal selling, and their Internet websites as their main advertising media. This has been revolutionized by digital media, which has in some cases largely replaced much printed material.

92. Describe any three types of services commonly offered by advertising and promotion agencies.

ANSWER The types of services commonly offered by advertising and promotion agencies are as follows:

R:

Account Services: These services are offered by managers who have titles such as account executive, account supervisor, or account manager and who work with clients to determine how the brand can benefit most from advertising and IBP. Account services entail identifying the benefits a brand offers, its target audiences, and the best competitive positioning, and then developing a complete plan.

Marketing Research Services: Research conducted by an agency for a client usually consists of the agency locating studies (conducted by commercial research organizations) that have bearing on a client's market or advertising and IBP objectives. The research group will help the client interpret the research and communicate these interpretations to the creative and media people.

Creative Services: The creative services group in an agency comes up with the concepts that express the value of a company's brand in interesting and memorable ways. In simple terms, the creative services group develops the message that will be delivered through advertising, sales promotion, direct marketing, social networks, mobile marketing, event sponsorship, or public relations.

93. List and describe the four methods of agency compensation.

ANSWER Commission system: The traditional method of agency compensation is the commission system, which is

R: based on the amount of money the advertiser spends on media. Under this method, 19 percent of the total amount billed by a media organization is retained by the advertising or promotion agency as compensation for all costs in creating advertising/promotion for the advertiser. The only variation is that the rate typically changes to 16 percent for outdoor media. This is a traditional system, and not all agencies use it.

Markup charges: This method of agency compensation adds a percentage markup charge (sometimes referred to as cost-plus) to a variety of services the agency purchases from outside suppliers. In many cases, an agency will turn to outside contractors for art, illustration, photography, printing, research, and production. The agency then, in agreement with the client, adds a markup charge to these services.

Fee system: A fee system is much like that used by consultants or attorneys, whereby the advertiser and the agency agree on an hourly rate for different services provided. The hourly rate can be based on average salaries within departments or on some agreed-on hourly rate across all services. This is the most common basis for promotion agency compensation.

Pay-for-results: Many advertisers and agencies alike have been working on compensation programs called pay-for-results or incentive-based compensation that base the agency's fee on the achievement of agreed on results.
