ESSAY. Write your answer in the space provided or on a separate sheet of paper.

82) Define the "right to private property" and provide four rationales for this right.

Answer: The right of private property is the legal right to own and use economic goods.

Property is not owned by the state.

Individuals may own property and use it as they see fit.

Individuals are allowed to accumulate property and other forms of capital and wealth without restriction.

Accumulation of privately owned property allows individuals to control their own destiny and decisions affecting them made by others.

Pride taken in ownership results in better care of property.

The ownership of private property gives a sense of security and a feeling of satisfaction from participation in society.

Private ownership develops respect for the property of others.

83) What is meant by the term "economic freedoms"? Provide examples.

Answer: Economic freedoms exist when the business system operates with few restrictions on its activities. Examples of economic freedom include the freedom of individuals to enter business; to locate anywhere; to enter contracts; to choose among competing goods and services; to choose an occupation; to access consumer and output markets; and to develop their own economic ends and the means to attain these ends by choosing and utilizing resources as they see fit. This approach encourages entrepreneurial talent and innovation.

84) What was the role of equality of opportunity in the early development of Canada as a nation?

Answer: Many of those involved in Canadian business in the 19th and 20th centuries were attracted to Canada because there was less influence exerted by nobility, landed gentry, and a rigid class system in North America than in Europe. There was less established wealth, and the "frontier" environment allowed individuals the opportunity to create their own wealth no matter what their background. This type of environment was appropriate for business: everyone was more likely to start the economic challenge of establishing and operating a corporation on about the same terms, and to have about an equal chance of succeeding. The opportunity existed to make one's own way by establishing a new business with minimum government intervention, and it was possible to pull up stakes and move to another part of the frontier.

85) Describe the term oligopoly and the role of the government in terms of price regulation in these industries.

Answer: An oligopoly exists where there are a few, large sellers in the industry whom behave similarly.

Some have become very large and have an enormous ability to influence price. In oligopolies there is a tendency for price leadership by one of the larger enterprises. Thus, government regulates price some of them, such as utilities.

Some industries, such as real estate and insurance, tend to charge identical commissions or estate premiums from rate books available to all enterprises in the industry.

The professions have suggested price ranges for their services. Governments control or influence through direct control over wages and profits (as during the Second World War, or the period from 1975 to 1978), taxation, direct regulation, provincial barriers to trade, and tariffs.

86) Define profits and describe the role they play in a capitalist economic system.

Answer: Profits are the excess of revenues over expenses and are closely associated with competition. The pursuit of profits spurs people into action and provides the drive and desire to do things. Corporations compete for profits, yet competition ensures that if excessive profits are made, others will be attracted to the industry. Profits are not only a regulator of efficiency, but also a measure of effectiveness.

87) Discuss how individuals' attitudes toward work have changed as a result of government programs and society's expectations.

Answer: Government programs now support the less fortunate, and the effects of unemployment have been reduced by Employment Insurance payments.

These programs may not have a socially desirable impact, as sometimes labour markets are distorted—actually causing unemployment.

Individuals now expect that more will be done for them, usually by governments but also by businesses enterprises by way of working conditions, fringe benefits, and salaries.

The tendency toward government handouts and a somewhat more paternal attitude by employers resulted in less need to work hard—or, as some argue, to work at all.

88) Government involvement in business, according to the fundamental principles of capitalism, should be minimal. Describe the government's role as advocated by capitalism, including the exceptions or the types of programs expected by governments even within capitalist systems.

Answer: Answers will vary.

89) Compare and contrast family capitalism with frontier capitalism.

Answer: Family capitalism is also referred to as crony and Confucian capitalism, this form is found in eastern Asian countries such as Taiwan, Malaysia, Thailand, and Indonesia. In some economies, extended clans dominate business activities and control capital flows. In many countries, the clans or families are created by Chinese descendants scattered throughout the region. Russia and China are examples of frontier capitalism, suggesting that capitalism is in its beginning stages. The fundamentals of business are being introduced as the government pursues for-profit business activities and an entrepreneurial class sprouts. The fundamentals are in various stages of being made operational. The role of government changes with the need to develop commercial law and regulation.

90) Discuss some of the challenges of capitalist systems.

Answer: Among the many challenges faced by a capitalist system are greed, mistrust, economic fluctuations, and business failures. Greed is an excessive and selfish form of self-interest where individuals desire more of something than is needed or fair. Trust is a challenge for many businesses operating in a capitalist system. After corporate failures when people have lost jobs and investments, there is likely to be less trust of business. Economic cycles are a feature of capitalism. As capitalism is based on a market system, there will be swings between prosperous times and recessions or even depressions. Another aspect of capitalism is failure that disposes of weak corporations and shifts resources to new or stronger ones.
