A nurse's sibling had a diagnostic test performed at the facility where the nurse is employed. Now the sibling asks the nurse to look up the result in the computer. In replying to the sibling, the nurse realizes that disclosing the result is permissible. Because this is a sibling who has given the nurse permission, the action is allowable.

INCORRECT My Answer

. . . .

The client's consent does not make it permissible for the nurse to view or disclose the test results.

not permissible. Only the physician is allowed to disclose laboratory results or findings to a client.

INCORRECT

The physician may delegate the disclosure of the results to another member of the health care staff, such as a nurse in the physician's office or other facility staff.

permissible. Because the sibling has paid for the service, the test results are actually the sibling's property.

INCORRECT

These factors do not make it permissible for the nurse to view or disclose the test results.

not permissible. Despite the request, there is no nurse-client relationship between the sibling and nurse.

CORRECT

There is no legal or professional basis for a nurse-client relationship between them. Therefore, it is not permissible for the nurse to view or disclose the test results. Even with the sibling's permission, to do so is a breach of client confidentiality. The test results may only be disclosed on the prescribing physician's authority.

A nurse manager notices that a nurse in the unit is not delivering care in accordance with a recent policy change. The effective approach for the nurse manager to take is to encourage the nurse to openly verbalize the reasons for resistance to the change.

CORRECT

The nurse manager should realize that resistance to change is likely if the people who must implement the change are not invested in the change process. The nurse manager should meet with the nurse to allow an open forum for the nurse to verbalize the reasons for reluctance to adopt the new policy.

explain to the nurse the importance of implementing the new policy.

INCORRECT My Answer

. . . . . . .

The nurse has likely rejected the change without critically thinking about the possible benefits; this is not the appropriate action by the nurse.

ignore the resistance and allow peer pressure to facilitate change in the nurse's behavior.

INCORRECT

The nurse manager should not ignore an individual who is refusing to implement a policy change. The nurse may act as a barrier to the change.

threaten disciplinary consequences if the nurse does not implement the new policy.

INCORRECT

Starting the meeting with a discussion of disciplinary consequences is unlikely to encourage open dialogue.

When checking on a confused client, a nurse finds that the client has fallen out of bed after climbing over the side rails. After determining that the client is uninjured, the nurse assists the client back to bed and contacts the provider to assess the client. The nurse then completes a variance report detailing the incident. Which of the following should be the next nursing action the nurse completes?
	• •
Make a copy of the variance report for the provider.
INCORRECT
Variance reports are confidential tools used by the institution to improve client care. They are never copied.
Submit the variance report to the nurse manager.
CORRECT
Variance reports are confidential tools used by the institution to improve client care. They are never copied, placed in, or referred to in a client's chart. Filin variance report does not substitute for a complete entry in the client's chart documenting the incident. Once completed, the variance form is submitted to nurse's most immediate supervisor such as the nurse manager.
